Relief for Local Officials

Thanks for visiting our site. It's been a pleasure associating and working with many of you, since 1978. We trust that this Conference shall continue to be the forum in which government officials serving within our Commonwealth, network with those of allied disciplines. Seven Springs is host to our inter-governmental "cream of the crop".

Over the years, it has become obvious that PACOG participants share much in common with the wide variety of stakeholders in stewardship of Pennsylvania's water quality. MicroLife Management now devotes much of its consulting service to those working in public sewerage facilities. But, as we endeavor to educate those contributing flow to publicly owned treatment works (POTW), many principles of water quality management remain the same, as those essential for on-site sewerage disposal...especially, "think before you flush" !! Now it seems, that many of the very same measures advanced to enhance water quality, are coming into question....does conservation exhibit a "diminishing return" ?? Of course, all parties wish to limit the flow to either on-site or POTW facilities. But, have we somehow inadvertently concentrate wastes, in the process? Do our new "health-conscious" food-grade oils (designed NOT to stick in our veins) equally elude traditional facilities designed to separate them in wastewater pretreatment? Finally, all costs continue to escalate. We endeavor with PACOG to educate stakeholders, in the real environmental issues facing Pennsylvania.

These and many other challenges face those charged with the design, construction, maintenance and regulation of wastewater, regardless of where it is disposed (even incineration and solid waste "cross-media pollution" issues). The MicroLife "family" is involved in grass-root policy development, at many levels of government and allied organizations (eg. PA Farm Bureau). These groups have all found that environmental (over)regulation now dominates many aspects of business in Pennsylvania; NOT just those closely associated with on-site wastewater management or POTW. Face it, there's too much to tackle alone. You need MicroLife. Please ask our family (Bonnie or Keith Smithyman) at the booth, for more info.
